

APRIL 26

CAFO

The modern farm looks nothing like the lush fields with happy animals pictured on packages in the supermarket. After World War II, an industrialized approach emphasizing the bottom line rather than planet and consumer welfare muscled out the small-scale, organic way of farming common up to then. Today, nearly all meat in restaurants and stores is a product of factory farms or CAFOs (Concentrated Animal Feeding Operations) which contain thousands of animals crammed into warehouses where they never get exercise or see the light of day. Today we are feeling the effects of profit over people and planet right here in Wisconsin. Nonpoint source (NPS) pollution, also known as polluted runoff, is a leading cause of water quality problems here at home.
